Technology has emerged as new strategic arena of competition: Army Chief

Indian Army is committed towards transitioning into a modern, agile, adaptive and technology-enabled future-ready force. All stakeholders, the services, industry partners, start-ups, research & development institutions, academia and policymakers should synergise their efforts and develop a vibrant national defence ecosystem.

AAT News Service

There is a vital need of being self-reliant in warfighting platforms and systems, besides achieving self-sufficiency in critical technologies through indigenous research & development.

The Indian defence industry in strengthening of overall defence architecture. The speakers also deliberated upon the technology developed so far and future roadmap to build cutting-edge technologies for military uses.

The second session focussed on 'Empowering soldiers: Amplifying impact through modern technologies'. Options to leverage present and next-generation technologies to enhance the capabilities of Indian Army were discussed during the session. Looking beyond the domain of land, the session analysed the role of space and cyber domains in the present context and future scenarios.

The participants brainstormed wide-ranging options ranging from military applications of cyberspace, impact of drones and satellites on the modern battlefield, besides delving upon hardware and software options to empower soldiers during the final session on 'Maximising technology effectiveness & soldier preparedness'.

Reflecting positive thoughts on impressive trajectory of Indian Army's transformation at the seminar, Deputy Chief of the Army Staff (Strategy) of the Indian Army, Lt General Taran Kumar Aich, reiterated that adoption of niche technology in tandem with agile doctrinal reforms is extremely crucial. Indian Army will continue to foster a spirit of collaboration with the industry and academia to empower the soldiers.
